

DRESS CODE

The clothes we wear say a lot about us. It sends a message to people around us, therefore it is important to take care of how we look so it does not send the wrong message. Every society has its own dress code and customary unwritten laws that most members of society understand. However, those who want to work professionally in an educational institution or engage in other similar activities involving interaction with different cultures – they need to be role models and indicators of the environment in which they are working in. We would like to present the basic rules of dressing –adapted to the activities our school implements.

The IDSS organizes visits from parents and others who are interested in the future of the IDSS. On this occasion, we require a certain wardrobe from all IDSS employees in order to show respect to our parents. This is of paramount importance, because during a visit of any kind we personally represent ourselves, the institution we work in but also our country.
